It is difficult to measure success because it could mean something different for each individual. In a basketball sense, success can be vaguely defined as being the best player you can be. That could mean playing on the junior high school team, playing on the high school team, playing college ball, playing professionally, or just be a good player in the summer leagues. It is each individual who needs to be improved. First of all, a passion for the game is needed. What for? Because basketball is a very complex and involved game that takes endless hours of work to become good at. To really succeed in the game, you need to do more than just pull around. A love of the game is needed in order to put in the right job. Basketball, for those who take it seriously, is a year-round sport. Play as much as you can; where and when you can. Basketball is a great game. Have fun. Learn from the players around you. Look at what they are doing well. What can you do to practice and become as good as your opponents? Do other players have moves that would be effective for you? All great players learn from others. Also, be aware of what you are doing well. Practice these things often. Take a strength you have and make it even stronger. If you are a fair shooter, shoot more and become a good shooter. If you are a good shooter, shoot even more and become a great shooter. Play as much as you can and improve the things you do best, while working on the things you can't do just as well. Find out what you need to improve. Practice to become proficient in the skills you have been weaker in. Work on developing a good complete game. There are camps, leagues, clinics, intramural, and many other places where you can play. All of these elements serve as opportunities. Join these types of programs and have fun, and always try to learn. Listen to successful people and find out what made them succeed. Try to model these behaviors. The more you train, the better you'll play. When you practice, practice with a purpose. Break down the game into skills that you need to improve and the skills you are good at. As I said, work to improve your weaknesses and work to really make those skills stronger. Make a practice schedule and follow it. Take each exercise and stay on time. Have goals for each workout and work towards achieving those goals. Work with a friend so you can help each other and strengthen each other. The habits learned in basketball can be translated into all aspects of life. The work you develop as a player will also help you become a better student, a better worker, a better teammate and a better person overall. "Set goals" - Work on Strengths - Improve Your Weaknesses - Play Often - Use Clinics, Leagues, Camps and Programs - Learn from Others - And most importantly, love the game! Passion is what makes greatness. Work on dribbling with your head up using both hands. Shoot as much as you can from inside the key and on offensive moves out of the dribble and before dribbling. Work on the transition of skill-practice with a friend. Work on defensive techniques, position, sliding, and footwork. Practice fake ball, jam steps, and top under moves. Yellow Dog Productions/Getty Images Euchre is the ultimate game with many dedicated fans. Four players are required and they are paired into two teams. It's a relatively simple game and you'll play with only a partial deck. Many people go with the game of 24 cards, while others use 32 or, in British euchre, 25. There are a number of variations on the euchre. They vary slightly in the rules and the number of players. For example, the three-handed euchre is a version for three people. The goal in most, however, is to be the first partnership (or individual) to achieve a certain number of points, which are earned by grabbing rounds. Dejon Knight, 16, didn't expect to leave the bench at all this year, let alone win the game for east haven high school. The Connecticut native has a cerebral disability that makes it difficult for him to play at the same level as all the other students. Although he is not really an official member of the team, he attends every training and game, making a serious effort to improve every time he goes out on the field. RELATED: Maroon 5 members of the band Drop To Floor To Comfort Overwhelmed Fan But last week things changed for Knight when he was called upon to play in a game. As he put on a jersey, he mentally prepared to make it a moment to shine. Moments after being on the field, Knight was in possession of the ball when the clock ticked. After months of practice, he aimed at the basket, pushed basketball slowly out of his hands and watched as he sank straight into the basket-scoring winning point. As soon as he entered, the entire student section of the crowd and the rest of the team rushed to the field, congratulating Knight on the accomplishment. I knew what he went through all these years and other things, and just to see his goals and dreams come true, meant a lot to me, said Perrotti WFSB. After the basket in tears, all students and staff hope the superstar will be featured on ESPN. Anthony Verderame, East Haven's director of athletics, said: He is a positive influence without a doubt. He's all here, days, he is on time, he works hard and he contributes as much as possible. He sets the bar for the rest of the team. He told the Blaze: We are like normal people, we can make same thing. It might take us a little longer, but we can compete with the big ones. However, when you play a repeated game, a one-shot strategy may not be the best shot: You and your opponent can get better long-term returns by cooperating (don't confess) sometimes and defection (confessing) to others. This helps you probe each other's strategies and is known as a mixed strategy. Let's say you know that your prisoner's dilemma is just a scenario in a series of repeated games. So you choose not to confess on your first shot. Instead of taking advantage of it, Player 2 can return the favor to your trust, not confess, which translates into the best mutual reward: five years each in prison. Strategy in repeated games takes into account the reputation of the opponent and future cooperation, and therefore these games can play much differently from one-shot games. In fact, even if you repeat the game, but still know exactly how many games there will be, both players will both expect the other to maximize utility by defecting on the last shot, or the last game of the series. Knowing this, both players realize that they have to defect on the penultimate shot. But since both players know that this will be the optimal strategy, they will each play their most selfish strategy before that, and so on, until they preempt the other on the very first game of the series. This is the only chance for either player to do so, lest both immediately fall into a disadvantage, never recover the lead. By playing a series of known endless games, players can adopt a tit-for-tat strategy, which punishes the opponent for defecting. Players match the defection in kind with their own defection for a predetermined number of moves, before attempting to restore confidence. This is called a triggering strategy. For example, if Senator 1 cooperates with a bill sponsored by Senator 2, but Senator 2 does not return the favor, Senator 1 may refuse to cooperate when Senator 2 proposes his next bill: tit-for-tat. Another triggering strategy is the dark trigger strategy, in which Player 1 cooperates until the player 2 defects, causing player 1 to defect on each move thereafter future cooperation on the part of Player 2. While tit-for-tat gives way to forgiveness, the dark trigger strategy is an endless cycle of defection. Sometimes players threaten a dark trigger strategy and don't follow with it. This is called cheap discourse: a non-binding threat. So if your fiance moves in with you but doesn't break the lease on his apartment, it's cheap to talk. If he burns down his old house the ground (and gets a tattoo of your name), it's commitment.
